

VIII . IDE Advanced School (IDEAS)

Chancellor: Takashi Shiraishi (President, IDE-JETRO)

Secretary-General: Tetsusaburo Hayashi

IDEAS was established as an education wing of the IDE. Since its inauguration in 1990, it has offered postgraduate-level programs in development studies in order to nurture experts who are able to deal with development issues that developing countries face today.

IDEAS offers two types of program in parallel: a one-year program for Japanese students (September-July) and a six-month overseas fellows program for young government officials and researchers from Asian countries (October-March). During the first six months (October-March), many courses are offered jointly to the two groups in English, enabling close interactions between the Japanese students and overseas fellows. During the programs, fellows and students are expected to develop a comprehensive understanding of national development policies and learn how to propose solutions to problems faced by developing countries. The programs emphasize the practical knowledge necessary to undertake development projects.

The main feature of the curriculum is the introduction of structured cluster courses. In particular, the program provides six core courses including two intensive lectures in the first semester, in which both Japanese students and overseas fellows can learn together about the experiences of Japan and Asia in socioeconomic development, as well as contemporary issues of development. Through this curriculum, fellows and students are expected to acquire a higher capacity to become experts in economic and social development in developing countries.

Most of the Japanese students who successfully complete the program proceed to a graduate program in development studies at an appropriate university abroad.

Training Program for Overseas Fellows

(October 2010-March 2011)

The training program for overseas fellows was initiated in 1991. The objective is to increase the absorption capacity of foreign aid in developing countries. The program is designed for young government officials who are in charge of socio-economic development policy planning and implementation in governmental organizations in the developing countries. The program provides opportunities to become familiar with the aid administration policies of Japan and other developed countries as well as to study economic development in Japan and other Asian countries. During the current academic year, we invited 14 government officials and researchers from 12 Asian countries.

Financially Supported Fellows from ERIA

Recently, in order to promote cooperation with other related organizations in human resource development, IDEAS started receiving overseas fellows that are financially supported by such organizations as ERIA (Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia). In 2010, out of 14 overseas fellows, 4 fellows were supported by ERIA.
